COMMITMENT TO EXCELLENCE

Several years ago, we made a commitment to measure and improve the quality of the student experience at Hesston College. We moved from in-house course evaluations and student satisfaction surveys and adopted nationally normed surveys that allow us to compare ourselves with other colleges. We found that we were good – in some cases better than we expected. But we were not satisfied with good, and went to work to improve.

We have improved since the first round of surveys, with our most recent results coming in as some of the highest in the country. These results would not be possible without the fine leadership of Dr. Sandra Zerger, Bonnie Sowers, Dr. Nelson Kilmer, Lamar Roth and many others who have used results to focus on specific areas for improvement. But student satisfaction and achievement are more than survey data analysis. The dedication of faculty and staff at all levels across all functions of the college is what makes the student experience. Whether it is a resident director giving time, a coach having a talk while driving a van, a facilities person taking a personal interest in a student worker, an IT person making sure students can access the Web or a faculty member taking time outside of class to listen, all of these things contribute to student success and satisfaction.

We like good results. But beyond scores and rankings, we do this work because we are called to do it. We are committed to “educate and nurture each student in Christ-centered community for service in the church and the world.” That call and mission are our mandate to do all we can to provide the very best for each student.

ACADEMIC XCELLENCE AT HESSTON COLLEGE

MARATHANA PROTHRO &
RACHEL McMASTER

Hesston College has long been known as a great place to start. Since 2006, the college has placed a new emphasis on researching specific elements of the learning experience and implementing classroom changes to continue providing an educational experience among the best in the country.

The nationally normed student surveys used by the college demonstrate strong academic preparation, course excellence and overall student satisfaction with the Hesston Experience. Hesston faculty have always worked to improve the classroom experience. Thanks to this data-driven approach, however, the college is able to make smart shifts and tweaks to courses and instructional methods.

“Our faculty and staff care about improving the student experience,” said Dr. Nelson Kilmer, who chairs the science and math division and analyzes and interprets Hesston’s survey results. “We always want to know how we can improve. We care deeply about our students’ learning.”

That attention to student learning is paying off in big ways. Hesston’s results from the most recent round of surveys position Hesston as a leader in outstanding academics and overall student experience – and not just among two-year colleges nationally, but four-year institutions as well.

According to the 2012 Individual Developmental Education Assessment (IDEA) – which measures instructional effectiveness at two-year, four-year and graduate colleges and universities – three fourths of Hesston College courses rank in the top half of all courses taught nationwide.

“Our results show that we are finding success in the efforts we make to be caring and people centered,” said Dr. Sandra Zerger, vice president of Academics.

Hesston’s student-centered approach is closely aligned with items students consider most important. The Student Satisfaction Inventory (SSI) – a widely used survey administered by Noel-Levitz – helps Hesston College understand both what students consider important in their college experience and how the college does at satisfying those needs and expectations. The results also show how Hesston compares to private four-year institutions nationwide. Hesston students’ top three priorities for their college experience are faculty knowledge, excellent instruction and valuable course content within their major – the same priorities for four-year students. In 2009, Hesston College students' satisfaction was an average of 20 percentile points higher than the national average at private four-year colleges. Three years later, the average said. "I am encouraged to integrate learning from across my classes in a way that helps me discover things in meaningful ways." Eicher and her classmates started at Hesston the fall after the college was ranked the number 2 two-year college in the nation by Washington Monthly magazine. That ranking was heavily based upon the college's gradua-difference was 23 points higher. The 2012 SSI results also show that the average Hesston College student satisfaction was 96 percent in relation to the importance of an item, compared to 85 percent of students at private four-years on the same items.

Student learning and intellectual growth are explored by both the SSI and the Community College Survey of Student Engagement (CCSSE), which measures Hesston against itself and other two-year institutions.

According Mallory Eicher '13, a President's Scholar and Dean's List student from Berne, Ind., (seen on the cover) students don't want to passively listen to lectures and memorize miscellaneous facts. She says they want an interactive environment that challenges them to work together to solve real problems.

"My interactive class discussions and projects at Hesston push me to think critically and to think for myself," Eicher tion rates and data from the 2009 CCSSE. Data from the 2012 CCSSE indicate positive change on campus.

Hesston College has exceeded the results in every CCSSE benchmark area that garnered the No. 2 ranking. The college now has the highest reported scores in the nation in the areas of student-faculty interaction and support for learners. In addition, Hesston is hundredths of a percentage point shy of the highest reported score for academic challenge.

"These results affirm the hard work our faculty and staff do day in and day out to provide our students with an exceptional learning experience," said President Howard Keim. "Instead of using them to sit back and say 'We've arrived,' we use them to get better." HCT

BECOMING #2 PLUS

Hesston College started using nationally normed surveys in 2006, and the results have trended upward so much the college now reports the highest score nationwide in some areas.

Since there have been no rankings of two-year schools since the college's number 2 honor from Washington Monthly in 2010, Hesston can't be considered number 1, but with the survey results higher now than from the results that got the ranking, as President Keim says, the college is a solid "two plus."

This place of success came from significant focused work, including a lot of trial and error.

The steps toward improvement are calculated and intentional at both a collective and individual level. The Dean's office and faculty members collaboratively discuss the survey data, how it affects them and their courses and how to respond. Faculty members attend on-campus in-service workshops and off-campus conferences geared specifically toward areas needing improvement. They tweak their curricula to find what improves student learning. They keep current on social and technological trends to meet students where they are.

Student satisfaction is broader than academics. Other areas also give careful attention to meeting student needs. From planning campus activities to dealing with disputes fairly to providing variety in meals and adequate living spaces, every faculty and staff member works for the good of the students.

Donors, alumni and friends play a part too. Financial support helps to carry out projects and keep spaces and equipment updated. Prayers and kind words and memories are energy giving, sustaining and hopeful.

When survey results come in, the process starts with a team made up of Vice President of Academics Sandra Zerger and institutional researchers (math faculty member Nelson Kilmer and chair of the nursing department Bonnie (Kauffman) Ac65, '67 Sowers) who begin looking at the results, comparing them to previous years and analyzing them. Zerger, Kilmer and Sowers then lead faculty and staff in understanding the results and how to work with them.

"It is exciting to see the progress we have made since our earliest experience with the surveys," said Zerger. "The results help us build a faculty team based on the factors of success."

The Hesston College community – both on-campus and off – just doing what is necessary to fulfill the mission statement of educating and nurturing each student is what makes for outstanding results and satisfied students.

EVERYDAY CONVERSATIONS

A man with glasses and a goatee, wearing a light blue button-down shirt and a pink tie, is sitting in an office. He is looking towards the right of the frame, appearing to be in the middle of a conversation. In the background, there is a computer monitor displaying a website, a desk with papers, and a window with green foliage outside. The overall lighting is warm and professional.

ACADEMIC
AT HESSTON COLLEGE

In a world of smart phones, social media, texting and email, students have distractions constantly waiting for them in their hip pockets. That's why psychology and youth ministry instructor Kevin Wilder, like most Hesston College instructors, uses his class time to build connections and engage with students.

"I see teaching as a conversation every day," said Kevin. "I try to share of myself, let students get to know me and allow them to share of themselves. At the end of the course, I want there to be a clear, practical take-away."

Kevin's methods earned him the top course award for his fall 2012 Conflict Resolution class, based on results from the IDEA survey – the second time in seven semesters one of his classes has earned the top award among Hesston faculty members.

Kevin's approach to teaching is relational and hands-on, using stories, activities and group work – any strategy that helps students make sense of the material.

He also promotes out-of-the-classroom connections. Some Developmental Psychology assignments include listening to life stories of Schowalter Villa residents, babysitting or trips to the elementary school to observe children's development. General Psychology students go on a field trip to the Prairie View treatment facility in Newton, Kan., and analyze IQ (intelligence) versus EQ (emotional intelligence) on TV's The Big Bang Theory.

Kevin also encourages classroom dialogue with the Curious Student Award – a certificate and stuffed "flying monkey" awarded periodically to a student who is engaged in class, asks insightful questions and talks about class material outside of class. Though the award is simple recognition in class, students now anticipate it.

"I was always very curious, but not a great student," said Kevin. "I understood the material, but couldn't quite close the loop – couldn't write a flawless paper or turn in an outstanding assignment. The students who get the Curious Student Award are not necessarily the best students, but they show interest."

Kevin's approach makes a difference for students. Following the spring 2013 semester, he received a thank you note from a student that read: "Thank you for your wonderful instruction this past year. It was wonderful getting to know you. I enjoyed how open and transparent you were with our class. I will use the material you taught us for the rest of my life." HCT

As top award winners, they receive a certificate and knitted scarf from Academic Dean Sandra Zenger. Hesston recognizes instructors each semester for courses that rank above the 75th percentile. IDEA considers courses that rank above the 60th percentile exceptional. For the fall 2012 semester, 11 instructors earned recognition for 13 courses.*

LEARNING TO DECIDE

AT HESSTON COLLEGE

Alyssa Rychener '13, Hesston, Kan., knew for a long time – for most of her life really – that she would start at Hesston College. Growing up she heard family members' Hesston stories, explored the campus and attended college events. Months before she started her own Hesston Experience, she knew her roommate, where she would live and her class schedule.

There was one thing she didn't know – her major.

According to the National Academic Advising Association, Alyssa's situation is not unique; between 20 and 50 percent of college freshmen are still deciding on a major.

With interests across several disciplines, Alyssa wasn't sure which road to take. She dabbled in various disciplines, and although she enjoyed many things about each path, she was still deciding.

Classes in several disciplines helped expand her learning to things she otherwise may not have discovered.

"The classes that I enjoyed and that challenged me the most were those where the instructor taught key elements and ideas that required my own exploration, learning and interaction with the text," said Alyssa. "My education instructor (Marissa King '05) always said, 'Claim your education,' and that is what I try to do."

She found herself in the Career Development course, designed specifically for deciding students to have opportunities for self-discovery through occupational research, observation of current trends, interviews and reflections. A class-assigned survey put teaching at the top of her professional personality profile, and it finally felt right.

"I like kids, learning and the classroom setting, and I want to help society, so elementary education really fits me well," she said.

— Alyssa Rychener '13

As she settled into her path, Alyssa's experiences exploring education broadened her intellectual growth and inspired future plans. A practicum in a bilingual Newton, Kan., elementary classroom allowed her to see how Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages (TESOL) works. A visit to a bilingual school in Wichita where 70 percent of the student population was of low socio-economic status gave her a glimpse into the diversity within classrooms and education in general.

"My Hesston Experience allowed me to discover a passion for education and to appreciate the diversity of learning styles and backgrounds coming together."

Hesston College students are more satisfied with the following specific areas of support than their peers at four-year private colleges and universities NATIONWIDE.

- Academic advisors knowledge about major requirements
- Residence hall staff's concern about each student
- Admissions counselor's responsiveness to students' unique needs and requests
- Caring and helpful campus staff

HESSTON EXPERIENCE:

writing fellow; tutor; student ambassador; Larks Nest supervisor; actor: A Midsummer Night's Dream (spring 2012), Green Card (fall 2012), She Loves Me (spring 2013); stage manager: The Boys Next Door (fall 2011); Bel Canto Singers; Student Advisory Board; Inclusion and Diversity Council; Honor Roll – two semesters; Dean's List – two semesters; 2013 Lark of the Year

BEYOND EXPECTATIONS

Hesston was a new world for me in which I was diversely challenged and cognitively stimulated. My emotional and spiritual growth interactions with my instructors were something that I did not expect, but which I value. They challenged me on theories, took the time to check in with me on assignments and about my life, encouraged me to run with my dreams and showed me how to balance a professional career while being engaged in other people's lives and doing things that bring wholeness and inspire others.

ON EXPERIENCES

I did practicums at the college level by shadowing Hesston classes. In all of the places I looked to go after Hesston, not one of them offered that kind of experience to freshmen and sophomores. As a freshman, I had 30 hours of Early Childhood Education practicum and my Intro to Education class spent a day at an inner-city Tulsa junior high and high school. That trip solidified my desire to become a teacher and help students across the learning spectrum be successful.

ABOUT BONI

"Boni threw herself into her practicums and went above her required hours and embraced equity in learning. She thinks critically and asks deep questions that push beyond the reading. She is an outstanding student who will do great things." – Marissa King '05, education instructor

GO EVERYWHERE

I will do Semester by the Sea in creative writing through Stony Brook (N.Y.) University. I will be tutored by an author who will help me publish a book at the end of the semester. After that, I will most likely attend Millersville (Pa.) University to get my bachelor's degree, then go right on for my master's. I have also been working with an editor to publish my autobiographical novella while self-publishing a book of poetry. HCT

STEVE MARTIN '04

FERNDALE, WASH.

MAJOR: chemical engineering

CAREER: Lead Process Engineer at Anvil Corporation, Bellingham, Wash.

HESSTON EXPERIENCE:

chemistry lab assistant; chemistry tutor; Student Development Committee; men's basketball team; junior high Sunday School teacher at Whitestone Mennonite Church

INSPIRATION TO SWITCH

I always thought I would go into medicine, but once I was at Hesston, I found I really enjoyed chemistry and switched paths. I remember an engineer speaking to our class about the field, and it really seemed to fit what I was looking for in a career. Jim Yoder and his passions for chemistry and teaching were instrumental in my decision to pursue chemical engineering. My relationships with Hesston students and instructors alike have and will continue to impact my life.

ON PREPAREDNESS

My Hesston instructors pushed me academically, and I appreciate that I could be a part of a strong math and science department. They prepared me to continue my education at Colorado School of Mines (Golden), a public research university devoted to engineering and applied science with responsible stewardship of the earth and its resources. Mines has the highest admission standards of any public university in Colorado and is among the highest of any public university in the U.S. I also really enjoyed and appreciate the general education courses and specialized courses like Biblical Literature I had at Hesston. These types of courses are often not available at larger engineering-focused universities, so having the chance to take those courses was great.

THE VIEW FROM EVERYWHERE

I graduated from Colorado School of Mines in May 2007 with a degree in chemical engineering.

I work for Anvil Corporation, which is an engineering design firm specializing in capital and maintenance improvement projects for oil refineries, upstream production and oil pipelines. We also do design work in the pulp and paper industry, water treatment and renewable energy.

MAKING A DIFFERENCE

I did the majority of the initial design work, along with detailed engineering and construction support to convert a wastewater treatment oily water equalization tank into a bioreactor tank, a more efficient and increased capacity solution for a local refinery. It is the most challenging and rewarding project I have worked on to date, and I have enjoyed watching it progress. HCT

PART OF THE EQUIPMENT

 ACADEMIC
AT HESSTON COLLEGE

A simple, yet profound, statement hangs on Joyce Huber's office door. Based on Mark 6:8, it reads, "Don't think you need a lot of extra equipment for this – you ARE the equipment."

That idea guides much of what Joyce does and what she tries to instill in students as well.

"Nursing is high-tech in a lot of ways," said Joyce, a nursing faculty member for 40 years. "But there are some things for which you just don't need equipment. Sometimes, nurses can provide as much healing by sitting and talking with a patient."

Teaching nursing students requires a lot of theory, practice, repetition and hands-on experiences, but after decades of clinical and classroom experience, Joyce knows those things happen best when there is a relationship between student and instructor.

"We work hard at building relationships and being student-centered," said Joyce, who is leaving clinical instruction behind beginning with the 2013-14 year. "We keep our office doors open and we spend a lot of time talking with students before and after class about their studies and their personal lives. Many students wear a lot of hats – parent, employee, spouse – we try to help them balance all of that."

Joyce has been a clinical instructor each year she has been at Hesston, so most of her time is spent with students in local hospitals and clinics observing and guiding them as they put their classroom and lab learning to work.

"Hospital staff have commented on how much Hesston College instructors are around in the clinical setting," said Joyce. "I enjoy being in touch with the students and building relationships with them in a professional setting. It's a time for me to connect with each student, talk about their patient and help find ways to apply their learning. It's fun for me to see their 'light-bulb moments' when they make connections between classroom and clinical."

Joyce led her last clinical in April, but she will continue teaching in the classroom, looking for ways to make meaningful connections with each of her students.

"Joyce has an amazing gift for relating to students and helping them learn," said Bonnie (Kauffman) Ac65, '67 Sowers, director of nursing. "When students are asked at the end of the semester about the positive aspects of their nursing courses, it is not unusual to see the words 'Joyce Huber.'"

— Joyce Huber

"It is such a blessing that Hesston College faculty take the time to get to know each student, pin-point their talents and characteristics and work with them to become holistic nurses," said nursing graduate Whitney Hickert '13, Hays, Kan. "Joyce daily demonstrates holistic nursing. She takes complicated subjects and breaks them down for students. She helps create light-bulb moments as we suddenly understand how a disease process works. She has truly perfected her calling to teach!" HCT

TOP STUDENT ATHLETES RECOGNIZED

ANDREW SHARP '99
SPORTS INFORMATION DIRECTOR

Two sophomore athletes were named Hesston College 2012-13 Male and Female Student Athletes of the Year at the annual Athletics Banquet April 25.

Hayley Gately '13, Roseville, Calif., co-captain of the softball team, was named as an all-region infielder for the 2012-13 season. She is the Larks' all-time leader in home runs, doubles, triples, runs and runs batted in. Off the field she served the Hesston campus as a student ambassador and resident assistant. Hayley will continue her academic and softball career at MidAmerica Nazarene University (Olathe, Kan.). She is the daughter of Stacy Gately.

"Hayley made countless contributions to our program and the broader Hesston campus," said softball coach Andrew Sharp '99. "She demonstrated tremendous leadership through her words, and more importantly, her actions. We will miss her, but are excited for her very bright future."

Jacob Landis '13, Sterling, Ill., is a member of the men's cross country team, a two-time competitor in the NJCAA national cross country meet and an all-region runner. He also helped the men's cross country team to the second highest GPA in the nation during the 2012-13 year. Jacob served the campus as a resident assistant, ministry assistant, chemistry lab assistant and a student ambassador. He was also one of two recipients of the newly established Lark of the Year Award at Larkfest 2013 for demonstrating excellence in academics, leadership and service. Jacob will attend Eastern Mennonite University (Harrisonburg, Va.) where he will run cross country for the Royals. He is the son of Keith '83 and Lois (Kaufman) '83, '88 Landis.

"Jacob is a gifted, well-rounded person," said cross country coach Gerry Sieber '64. "He's had a meaningful engagement with so many aspects of the Hesston College community, and I expect he will make significant contributions to the church and the world."

The Student Athletes of the Year award was created during the 2011-12 year by a desire from the Athletics Department to acknowledge the outstanding men and women who represent Hesston College through athletics. The award recognizes the accomplishments, excellence and leadership of one male and one female student athlete on the field, in the classroom, in the dorms and campus community. Hesston coaches nominate one player from each of their teams for the award, and votes from athletic department staff members determine the winners. HCT men's team fell just short of the number one ranking with a 3.833 GPA.

"When you consider all of the intangible elements of this achievement, it is rather remarkable," said coach Gerry Sieber '64. "Our student athletes have a lot on their plates besides their sport and classes. This academic accomplishment is a testament to the culture of the college and to the kind of people who make Hesston College a special place."

AVIATION CAMPAIGN

In mid December, thanks to a generous anonymous gift given in honor of Wilbur Bontrager '73 (Middlebury, Ind.), the college was able to purchase a Redbird MCX C182 G1000 GFC700 full-motion flight simulator geared toward Crew Resource Management and two-pilot cockpit training with single and multi-engine configurations.

In mid March, thanks to a substantial lead gift, a new plane joined the fleet – a 2005 Cessna 172S Skyhawk with Garmin 1000 avionics. The remaining five planes in the fleet are receiving avionics upgrades.

Also this spring, updates and enhancements to the Hesston College Aviation offices and hangar were completed. New paint, furniture and general updates have given the space a fresh feel.

Thanks to many supporters, the aviation portion of the campaign is complete.

LOGO

The new Hesston College logo is part of a larger visual identity system that established guidelines and parameters for the way the college presents itself visually. The old nameplate represented the college well for 21 years, but the college needed something stronger to stand out and make a more pronounced statement. The arrow emphasizes both parts of Hesston's promise of "Start here, go everywhere."

Hesston College Today has also been refreshed. The magazine reflects the new visual identity and has grown by 12 pages so we can provide you with better coverage of our alumni and campus happenings. Watch how it continues to evolve and grow into its own throughout the coming year!

CAMPUS ENTRANCE

- Increase campus visibility along Main Street
- Create a welcoming and inviting campus entrance
- Add landscaping to improve aesthetics and make a strong, positive first impression
- Add additional parking and a drop-off area to better serve campus visitors

I didn't expect Hesston to be so welcoming and everyone to be so nice but I really appreciate it. The instructors are so approachable and even extend an invitation to come drop by their offices any time.

I like Hesston's diversity, small size, how everyone communicates with one another and the way students and instructors are able to interact. Hesston is a great place to start. I would absolutely send a student here.

WHY I SUPPORT HESSTON COLLEGE AS A PARTNER

DR. KERE FREY '82

A simple yet far-reaching question, “What would you like to study?” was sufficient to induce a pinball anxiety. Time has not diminished the recollection of an uninitiated farm boy. It was clear from where I came – but not where I should be headed.

Enter Hesston College.

Fixated on the (barely) undulating lowlands of south central Kansas, one could easily overlook the cosmopolitan nature of this place, yet it offered fellow students and professors from other hemispheres and classes and activities to accommodate and stimulate many spheres of interest.

My fascination evolved from physical education disciplines to biology and chemistry. I was afforded the chance to participate in athletics, music and theater while fostering and fortifying my Anabaptist heritage.

Like red winter wheat, Hesston encouraged me to thrive.

Of course, Hesston College is about more than a study focus. Ideas and experiences should take you out of your comfort zone. Hesston nurtured an engagement that led to life lessons – lessons that resonate today in my role as physician, educator and administrator.

Hesston College offers to sometimes nudge, sometimes kickstart a receptive student on a fruitful life journey. It is a relationship that merits cultivation. It is a relationship that deserves to be sustained.

I have been blessed to be included in the Hesston Experience, and I choose to help offer that experience to others. HCT

LITTLE DECISIONS HAVE BIG RESULTS IN BOSTON MARATHON

The 2013 Boston Marathon was Lynn Fielitz's '79, Walden, N.Y., second time running the marathon, and he expected it to be much like the first. Tragically, it would be much different than any of the 14 marathons he has run. Looking back, he notes that even one tiny difference in his day's events could have meant a world of difference.

Lynn crossed the finish line on April 15 about three minutes before the bombs exploded. Drained of energy after 26.2 miles, he hadn't yet made it to the water table.

And he can't help but think how a series of events kept him safe.

Hours earlier, while being bussed to the starting line, the bus broke down just a couple of miles from the starting point. The runners were loaded onto a backup bus and once at the starting line, scrambled to get into place to start the race. Lynn made it into the second wave of runners as race officials shut the starting corral gate behind him.

At mile 23, Lynn stopped for about 20 seconds for greetings and photos with a former colleague before he was on his way for the remaining three miles.

As he turned onto the now infamous Boylston Street for the last half mile, Lynn remembers looking at the people sitting outside cafes watching runners and the crowds packed along the barricades.

"I was running along the left side of the street – the side the bombs went off – high fiving kids and enjoying the last bit of the race," he said. "Later I kept thinking about how many of those people may have been injured just minutes later. One more water break or walk break, if I had gotten on the bus sooner, if we hadn't broke down or I was in a different wave of runners – any little decision could have made three minutes of difference. I am thankful that God was watching out for me." HCT

Lynn Fielitz ran sprints and did the high jump on the track team at Hesston. He also began his volleyball career at Hesston as a member of a student-formed club team. Lynn is associate professor/associate director of instruction in the Department of Physical Education and the former head women's volleyball coach at the United States Military Academy, West Point (N.Y.). He credits Hesston College and coach Gerry Sieber '64 for his love of road races. "Hesston was a great place for me to start," he said.

BEL CANTO SINGERS MAKE FIRST CARNEGIE HALL APPEARANCE

The Bel Canto Singers celebrated the group's 30th anniversary May 6 to 16 with an east coast tour highlighted by a four-day New York City excursion and a performance at Carnegie Hall.

The 21 singers and three alumni, under the direction of Bradley Kauffman, joined the Masterworks Festival Chorus mass choir to present Johannes Brahms' Requiem under the direction of Donald Neuen and with the New York City Chamber Orchestra in Carnegie Hall's Stern Auditorium May 12.

"It has been the ultimate goal for performers to perform at Carnegie Hall for more than a century," wrote Morgan Martin '14, New Holland, Pa., in the group's Facebook travel journal. "Now it was finally our time to perform the Brahms' Requiem that we worked for five months to accomplish! Performing on stage felt unreal. It was an incredible experience that we will remember for a lifetime."

Hesston College alumni and friends joined Bel Canto in New York for five days of sightseeing and connecting with each other, students and the college.

Bel Canto Singers performed 10 concerts in six states on their 10-day tour. Other concert highlights included New York City concerts at the 15th Street Friends Meeting House hosted by Manhattan Mennonite Fellowship and at New York's Cathedral of St. John the Divine. HCT

COLLEGE WELCOMES NEW VICE PRESIDENT

Mark Landes began his new role as vice president of finance and auxiliary services in June. He replaces Don Weaver '83 who vacated the position in September after six years for a new job opportunity.

Landes' role includes serving as the college's chief financial officer, as well as overseeing human resources and the college's auxiliary services, including the Business Office, Food Service, Information Technology and Campus Facilities.

Landes spent the last 13 years in the banking industry, specializing in banking and lending for higher education and nonprofit groups for the last seven years. His most recent position was senior vice president of education and nonprofit banking with Wells Fargo in Denver.

"Mark brings expertise in higher education finance that will be most helpful in our strategic planning," said President Howard Keim. "His care for Hesston College, desire to serve in this kind of setting and his competent leadership will be great gifts to the college."

Landes is married to DeeDee (Martin) '02 Landes and they have two young children, son, Kason, and daughter, Taylor. HCT

ENDOWED SCHOLARSHIPS BENEFIT FUTURE STUDENTS

Hesston College added three scholarships to a list of almost 100 endowed scholarships to help offset tuition costs. Students with particular interests, qualifications or financial need will be eligible to receive the scholarships as soon as the 2013-14 year.

The Kenneth Steider Memorial Scholarship, named in honor of the 1949 graduate and 11-year college employee, will benefit international students at Hesston College. Steider, who passed away Sept. 15, 2011, served the college as librarian and part-time English instructor before spending 27 years of service in Taiwan.

The Carole King Jefferson Endowed Education Scholarship will be awarded to one student every year who intends to study education. King Jefferson was a 1963 graduate and spent 34 years as an educator at Valley City (N.D.) State University. The scholarship was established by her family following her death in December 2011.

The changing face of race and ethnicity in Mennonite Church USA was the inspiration for the Hesston College Inclusion Scholarship. It was initiated by alumna Annette (Steider) '83, former staff, Board of Directors member Brown and her husband Greg Brown of Frisco, Texas, as a way to improve diversity and inclusion at Hesston College, and will be awarded annually to a student from underrepresented groups within Mennonite Church USA.
